Whitewater is the first major scandal associated with the Clintons, but it highlights how Bill and Hillary view the power of public office as a mechanism to enrich themselves and their friends, and have done so dating back to the 1970s. More than a difficult to decipher land deal with a shady loan thrown into the mix, the scandal is one of the earliest indications that the Clinton family will do or say whatever it takes to promote their self-interests and then feign shock when their schemes are discovered. It's the exact same formula for "success" that Hillary uses to this very day.

As Secretary of State, Hillary Clinton was responsible for coordinating and implementing the foreign policy of the United States. What she actually did was leverage her position to further the interests of the wealthiest individuals and businesses, both at home and abroad. In exchange for her unscrupulous acts, the Clinton Foundation, the Hillary presidential campaign, and the Clinton family itself accepted tens of millions of dollars in financial contributions and other monetary payments. Conflicts of interest were refuted, denied, disclaimed, and ignored. Meanwhile, it would be challenging to find examples of the Secretary going out of her way for those who couldn't offer big checks in return.

Under Hillary Clinton's "leadership" as Secretary of State, U.S. Ambassador Chris Stevens and three other Americans were brutally murdered during a terrorist attack in Benghazi, Libya. Requests for additional security were ignored. Clinton's attempt to shift blame on an obscure Internet video was nothing more than a political red herring. A House committee investigative report held no smoking gun, but her ineptitude in dealing with a highly caustic situation is easily seen in the 800-page report. After the report's release, Hillary told the media, "I think it's pretty clear it's time to move on." Tell that to the families who lost their loved ones, Hillary. And keep telling that to yourself while you try to sleep with a clear conscience.

Sex scandals seem to follow Hillary no matter where she goes, and her response is always the same: refute and cover up. Most recently, the Clinton State Department impeded the official investigation into State Department employees soliciting prostitutes while overseas on official business. Numerous officials reported that their efforts to uncover the true details of the hazardous behavior were met with political interference and restrictions on access to vital documents. Ultimately, three of the employees who exhibited the most egregious behavior received suspensions of just a single day. Perhaps this punitive action falls in line with Hillary's equally toothless personal approach of forcing Bill to sleep on the couch each time she uncovers one of his numerous sexual indiscretions.

It seems as though Hillary's affinity for all things healthcare extends only to instituting mandates on the average Joe. When it comes to revealing the true state of her health, all bets are off. Neurologists have suggested that Hillary suffers from post-concussion syndrome from earlier brain injuries that caused a concussion and blood clot. Most of us always knew she had a brain problem, but this diagnosis has resulted in blinding headaches, dizziness, and trembling in her hands. This condition is also known to severely limit cognitive abilities in many sufferers. In late July of 2016, multiple smart phone video recordings captured Hillary convulsing in a way that caused many to ask if she was publicly having a seizure. At a 9/11 memorial later that year, video of her collapsing went viral with her doctors first blaming overheating and dehydration, then changing their tune, blaming pneumonia. We know her health has affected participation in campaign events, but what might it really mean at 3AM when America's security hangs in the balance?

Days before the 2016 Democratic National Primary, Wikileaks released thousands of email messages obtained by Russian hackers from the Democratic National Committee's email servers. These messages contained damning evidence pointing to the DNC fixing the nomination in Hillary's favor by working to sabotage the campaign of her opponent, Bernie Sanders. Shortly following the public data dump, DNC chairwoman, Debbie Wasserman Schultz, announced she would resign. Mere hours following her resignation, Hillary issued a statement proclaiming her gratefulness to Wasserman Schultz's "leadership" and went on to announce that the disgraced Wasserman Schultz would take a prominent role in the Clinton campaign as an honorary chair. It seems as though birds of a feather campaign together.
